International studies and intercultural cooperation July 4—15, 2011

Today, no organization, institution or enterprise can afford to ignore European and international dimensions when doing business. We are part of a dynamic world where changes brought about globalization require a reorganization of knowledge in order to meet the emerging political, social and economic challenges.

The internationalization of professions associated with this globalizing movement means that managers are more and more seeking employees who are able to speak several languages and work across cultures.

ILEI's summer school is designed for Masters students in fields such as political science, international studies, intercultural studies or economics, as well as for people working within an international context.

Course description

Combining languages classes (program in English and improvement of French language skills for non-French native speakers or improvement of English language skills or another language) and international expertise, the summer school offers an innovative and professionalizing program structured around three areas of knowledge and skills development:

1. academic through scholarly seminars
2. competencies through theme-based workshops
3. practice through project-based workshops.

Seminars themes:

International cooperation: Current issues and strategies; international project management; contemporary influence of intercultural relations on the media; contemporary international economic issues; culture and globalization, integrating cultural diversity in European management.

Workshops themes:

International project management; intercultural negotiation; legal aspects of international cooperation; intercultural communication; integrating cultural diversity in European management; communicating with body language.

Themes discussed in these seminars and workshops will be illustrated by case studies from Europe, the Middle East and the Americas.

Rich and varied cultural activities will allow students to discover the region of the Yvelines and give them a more relaxed environment to experience this intercultural exchange program.
