The screenshot shows a Microsoft Internet Explorer browser window displaying the EBSCOhost search results for the query "brain drain". The search results page includes a navigation menu at the top with options like "New Search", "Publications", "Subject Terms", "Cited References", and "More". The search bar contains the text "brain drain" and a "Search" button. The search results are displayed in a list format, with the first result highlighted. The result title is "A BRAIN GAIN OR A BRAIN DRAIN? MIGRATION, ENDOGENOUS FERTILITY, AND HUMAN CAPITAL FORMATION." by CHEN, HUNG-JU. The source is "Economic Inquiry", Oct2009, Vol. 47 Issue 4, p766-782, 17p, 2 Charts, 2 Graphs. The document type is "Article". The subject terms include "EMIGRATION & immigration", "INTELLECTUAL capital", "ENDOGENOUS growth (Economics)", "BRAIN drain", "ECONOMIC development -- Mathematical models", "ECONOMIC development -- Social aspects", "LABOR market", and "ECONOMIC aspects". The abstract is: "This study develops an endogenous growth model of migration to analyze the impact of international migration on the economic growth of a source country. When making their fertility and education decisions, adults may have the option of migrating to a foreign country. We find that changes in the migration probability or the extent of migration costs will lead to a trade-off between the quality and the quantity of children. When a host country cannot differentiate between the abilities of migrants, an increase in migration probability will raise a source country's economic growth. When low- and high-skilled workers are faced with different migration probabilities, allowing more low-skilled workers to emigrate will cause a 'brain gain' in both the short run and the long run. However, relaxation of restrictions on the emigration of high-skilled workers will damage economic growth in the long run, although a 'brain gain' may occur in the short run. (JEL F22, J24, O15) [ABSTRACT FROM AUTHOR]".
